

About the Contributors

JAMES F. MISKEL is the director of the Policy Making and Implementation curriculum and a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College. He holds a Ph.D. from the State University of New York. Prior to joining the faculty at the War College, he served as a director, Defense Policy and Arms Control with the National Security Council during the Reagan and Bush administrations. His areas of interest include national security policy, defense industry policy, and European/Soviet history. He has published articles on U.S. post-Cold War strategy in Europe and humanitarian operations. His recent area of re-search is in on the role of economics in national security strategy. miskelj@nwc.navy.mil

DAVID T. BUCKWALTER is a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College. He is pursuing a doctorate of humanities at Salve Regina University and retired from the U.S. Air Force as a colonel in 1999. While on active duty, his areas of specialization were air operations and logistics, and he commanded a maintenance squadron and a logistics group. He has authored over fifteen case studies and curriculum readings, and his recent area of research is in strategic leadership of networked organizations and use of the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator. buckwald@nwc.navy.mil

VALERIE J. LOFLAND is a former member of the Naval War College faculty who is currently stationed with U.S. Air Forces in Europe. She holds a Ph.D. from the University of Denver and currently serves on active duty with the U.S. Air Force, holding the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. Her military area of specialization focuses on manpower and personnel policy issues.

LAURENCE L. MCCABE is a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College and serves on active duty in the U.S. Navy, holding the rank of Commander. His military professional experience includes service on the east and west coast as a surface warfare officer on cruisers and destroyers. A 1997 graduate of the Naval War College, he has served on the staffs of Cruiser Destroyer Group One and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy as the Special Assistant for POM & Budget Development. As the former Military Group Commander in the Dominican Republic, he specializes in Latin American security issues. mccabel@nwc.navy.mil

RICHARD J. NORTON is a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College. He is completing his doctorate in International Relations at the Fletcher School of Law & Diplomacy; and retired from the U.S. Navy in 1996 with the rank of Commander. While on active duty, he served extensively at sea on cruisers and destroyers. He also served on Capitol Hill as a Senate Liaison Officer with the Navy's Office of Legislative Affairs and with several political-military assignments on senior staffs. His military professional experience is focused in surface naval operations and national security policy. He has published articles on failed states, humanitarian early warning, emerging security issues as well as numerous case studies. Three national security volumes he has edited have been published by the Naval War College Press. He also teaches courses on military history. His most recent area of research is in African regional military affairs and related peace keeping, humanitarian and refugee operations. nortonr@nwc.navy.mil

RONALD E. RATCLIFF is a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College and serves on active duty in the U.S. Navy, holding the rank of Captain. His military professional experience is focused in surface naval operations, international security affairs, and national security policy. He commanded USS Gary (FFG-51) and served as the U.S. Naval Attaché to Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. His recent area of research includes U.S. security policy in Southeast Asia and the South China Sea, Navy Headquarters Staff reorganization, and consideration of U.S. policy and intervention between the People's Republic of China and Taiwan. ratclifr@nwc.navy.mil

JOHN E. STOCKER, III is a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College and serves on active duty in the U.S. Air Force, holding the rank of Colonel. His military professional experience is focused in missile and space operations. He commanded the 90th Operations Support Squadron and was the Deputy, Operations Group Commander at the 90th Space Wing. His recent areas of research include the role of public policy and the news media and the 1972 Antiballistic Missile Treaty. stockerj@nwc.navy.mil

BRIAN W. STORCK is a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College and serves on active duty in the U.S. Air Force, holding the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. His military professional experience is focused in intelligence and special operations. His recent area of research includes: African regional military affairs, military ethics, and warfare in the Victorian Age. storckb@nwc.navy.mil

GEORGE E. TEAGUE is a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College and has been selected for promotion to Colonel in the U.S. Army. His military professional experience is focused in artillery and ground maneuver operations. He commanded the 1st Battalion, 7th Field Artillery in the 1st Infantry Division. His recent area of research includes strategic leadership of not-for-profit, government, and educational organizations. teagueg@nwc.navy.mil

DAVID A. WILLIAMS is a Professor of National Security Affairs at the Naval War College and serves on active duty in the U.S. Navy, holding the rank of Captain. His military professional experience includes service as both an aviation and submarine officer. He commanded Patrol Squadron ELEVEN (VP-11) and served with The Joint Staff, where he coordinated operations and defense policy issues with the National Security Council (NSC) and interagency organizations. His recent areas of research include the evolving role of the

NSC, and strategic leadership of government and educational organizations. He is the editor of this publication. williamd@nwc.navy.mil

DOUGLAS A. YESENSKY was a member of the Naval War College faculty from 1997 through 1999. He graduated from the Naval War College in 1995. In addition to teaching the Policy Making and Implementation course, Captain Yesensky developed and taught an elective course on the economic and environmental aspects of closing military bases. Retired from the U.S. Navy, Doug Yesensky teaches for the Naval War College's College of Continuing Education in the San Diego, California area.

